The name of the coaches is derived from its production facility, the Reichsbahnausbesserungswerk (Raw) Halberstadt. The production of the express train corridor coaches that had no air conditioning and were based on the UIC-Z specifications, started in the 1980es.

The new coaches were painted in the green and beige livery of the DR. This was normal for all express train coaches from the mid-1980s. When the coaches were not used in express trains on the lines of the German Democratic Republic, they were frequently used in transit and international trains.
