- Design and lettering according to the steam locomotive class 86 of the DRG (Items 73026, 73027 and 79027).
- FLEISCHMANN PROFI plug-in coupling for replacement is included

After the merger of the German Länderbahnen to the German Reichsbahn Gesellschaft in the 1920s, the large variety of passenger coach types became almost unmanageable. This led to the development of new standard passenger coaches. Although the heavy all-steel version of the two-axle corridor coach offered more safety and comfort for the travelers, it sometimes made quite a rumbling noise when driving. This was the reason why the coaches were soon given the nickname "Donnerbüchsen".
